MISSION STATEMENTS

Many things have changed and many things have remained the same in architectural education. This we know. Yet the debate as to what requires conservation and what requires experimentation continues. In this opening keynote event, seven academic leaders of a new generation have been asked to present what they consider to be an ideal mission statement of architectural education, free from the constraints that institutional and professional inertia often impose, in order to articulate what is new or persistent about architecture in the 21st century.

John McMorrough, U. of Michigan

Heather Woofert, Washington U. in St. Louis

Chris Perry, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute
