CALL FOR PAPERS

The Association of Collegiate Schools of Architecture invites paper submissions under the 22 thematic session topics + additional open sessions.

Today’s architecture curricula engage students in professional studies that are determined by an array of spatial, environmental, technological, media, economic, social, and political factors. The globalization of architectural education impacts the profile of our students, where they come from, how we educate them, and where they go with the knowledge and experience gained while matriculating through our institutions. These changes are also mirrored in the profession where architects from large firms to small offices now build and practice in many different regions of the world. New dynamic educational and professional contexts challenge us to take stock of the long held categories of local/global, national/international, and western/non-western.
